You are not alone

We know that being a parent or carer isn't always easy. Although it's often amazing and rewarding to watch your children or young people grow up, it can also be really hard work. Things might feel especially difficult if your child or young person is struggling with their mental health. Or if their mood and behaviour seem different, and you're not sure why or what you can do to help.

But you are not alone.

- One in six children aged 5-16 are likely to have a mental health problem. This figure went up by 50% between 2021 and 2022 alone.
- The proportion of young people aged 17-19 in England with a probable mental health problem jumped from one in six to one in four.

Most lifelong mental health issues begin in childhood. But talking about wellbeing early on can help us all cope better with life's challenges. As a parent or carer, you are possibly in one of the best positions to speak to your child and support them as best you can. This may mean finding another trusted person for them to speak to about their mental health and wellbeing, or seeking professional help.

In this leaflet we will talk about:

- Seeing the signs
- Supporting your child or young person
- Seeking professional help.

Seeing the signs

Changes in your child's typical behaviour may be an indicator of deteriorating mental health or wellbeing. These signs may be emotional, behavioural or physical changes.

The emotional signs to look out for include:

- Crying more than usual
- Persistent sadness
- Irritability and aggression - particularly if this manifests in regular, unprompted outbursts
- Talking about morbid topics such as death or suicide

Some of the behavioural signs that could be a sign of poor mental health include:

- Young children may become clingier while young adults more become more withdrawn
- Losing interest in friends and other things they like doing
- Being reluctant to talk
- Usual activities don't retain their interest
- Difficulty concentrating

Some of the most common physical signs to look out for include:

- Self-harm
- Changes in appetite
- Disrupted sleep patterns
- Increased incidences of bed wetting for younger children
- Frequent headaches or stomach aches
- Rapid loss of weight
- Teeth grinding
- Loss of hair

Ways to support a child or young person

Time to talk

Giving children and young people opportunities to open up is one of the biggest things we can do as parents and carers to support their wellbeing.

It can be easy to forget the simple power of sharing what we're going through and feeling heard. But even though you can't fix everything when your child is struggling, you can make them feel seen and understood - and this in itself can make them feel more able to cope.

Here is a link to some conversation starters from Young Minds UK:

How are you feeling?

How can I support you through this?

If you need to talk to someone else, that's okay too

Pay attention to how they are feeling or behaving and support them through difficulties. It may not be easy facing challenging behaviour, but try to help them understand what they're feeling and why.

Support and encourage interests. Being active or creative, learning new things and being a part of a team helps connect us and boost our mental wellbeing. Show interest in their life and what's important to them

Seek professional help or advice

It can be difficult to get through to children and young people at times, especially when they are going through a hard time. Early help can prevent children from coming to harm. When families face problems, getting the right support, at the right time, is essential and can prevent a mental health crisis.

There are a range of services designed to support children and young people and their families in these difficult times. These include.

- Apps and text services
- Counselling and drop in services
- Telephone Helplines

These are listed below.

If your child needs immediate medical attention or is a risk to themselves or others seek emergency assistance via 999
